Common misconceptions about transferring to a new Certification Body

If we change providers, we will need to re-start our three year audit cycle again.

Not true. As your new Certification Body, we'll pick up your cycle wherever you are at and our auditors will complete your next scheduled audit.

A new Certification Body will charge a fee for the transfer.

Southpac Certifications does not charge any fees to transfer your certification to us.

It's easier to stay with our current provider, even if we are unhappy.

Transferring your certification is not difficult. We provide you with a proposal prior to transferring to us, so you know what to expect in terms of our costs and dealing with us. If you are looking for better value, more flexibility and continuity of auditors who will help improve your business, it is worth considering the change to Southpac Certifications.

Don't leave it to us. Let our transferred clients do the talking.

All Industries Group is a leading design, engineering and fabrication business based in Rockhampton, providing purpose-built solutions to mining and construction clients both nationally and internationally.

After being ISO 9001 certified for seven years, they were seeking a change from their current provider, while at the same time looking to achieve certification for an Integrated Management System for Quality, Safety and Environment.

During the audit process with their previous provider, the All Industries team found new problems were popping up that didn't exist before, which was creating more work based on rectifying – rather than improving – their Quality Management System.

They transferred to Southpac Certifications to deliver an audit process that would fit their business, and better understand the needs of their market.

"It was a really good experience. Southpac didn't create any unnecessary hurdles."
